MamaNa certainly poses a question Priscans have struggled with for generations: do you maintain your isolation and therefore your cultural purity, keeping Prisca safe and protected, but potentially risking stagnation by preserving antiquated ways of life? Or do you open your borders and join the galactic community to continue evolving and learning, but potentially at the cost of cultural dilution and the loss of a distinctly Priscan identity?

- "That's precisely why I support the Reflectionist doctrine and the Purity Laws preserving Priscan isolation," I say.
- "It just seems wrong to hide from the rest of the galaxy and to waste our talents when we could be using our gifts to help spread knowledge and culture," I say.
- "I can't be sure that either way is right just yet. I'm still waiting until I see proof of something real before I make up my mind, but likely the answer lies somewhere in the middle," I say.
- "If Versus has taught me anything, it's to remain open to new ways of thinking. So I'm going to do just that before I pass any judgment on ancient, global traditions," I say.
